

How to work with people

As a UX designer, I put myself in the shoes of users every day to understand their needs and create intuitively accessible solutions to complex problems. Now I'd like to apply my structured and solution-oriented approach to Volt to improve our communication and organization.

Perhaps even more important for this role is my time on the board of 'hausgemacht': Leading a cultural association with over 60 volunteers taught me a lot about how to create the right environment to achieve the collective goal. In this role I learned how important it is to

- Create clear communication paths and simple structures so people know where to go and who to talk to
- Keep a calm overview, especially when things get stressful or unclear
- Mediate between different perspectives and make sure everyone feels heard
- Stay neutral in discussions and actively seek feedback instead of assuming

Unity as our strength

Volt is amazing because we are so diverse. I believe the European Board should be a bridge that connects us all.

I am running as a fresh face for the co-leadership. No old conflicts, no personal agenda to push. I can be a truly neutral voice. I see myself as someone who listens to our national chapters, understand their unique struggles, and help us all pull in the same direction.

I believe in Volt's goal to have seats in national parliaments by 2029. We already have the best ideas for Europe, now we just need to work as one team to deliver them!

Different perspectives, one commitment

I've been a Volt campaigner in both Vienna and Munich. Living in Austria for four years before moving back to Germany showed me something important: even when countries seem similar, their political realities are actually quite different. I therefore want to respect the different needs of each local chapter.

I'm very aware that as a white, cis-male European, I have a lot of visibility granted to me by society. I care deeply about making Volt an inclusive place. Therefore, it's my duty to amplify the voices of marginalized groups within our movement.

I am ready to fully commit as Co-President of Volt and dedicate my time to supporting our chapters across Europe.
